This is Main Street in West Dennis as it appeared on a picture postcard back in the 1920s. It was not yet called Route 28, and automobile traffic was light -- believe it or not. And yet, a few signs of the progress to come ring home; the overhead wires alongside the road carrying power and telephone service, not to mention the fact that the scene was actually put on a penny postal for the tourists to send back home. Today, this view would have to take in the summer's bumper-to-bumper traffic, plus all those shops and signs scattered every few feet. It's a far cry from when the village was known as "Crowe Town" (after an early settler named John Crowe), but it's vintage Dennis along the south shore. (Postcard from the Richardson-Mayflower collection.) If you can identify any of the houses in the picture, please send a letter to the editor to the Dennis Bulletin, P. O. Box 704, Dennis, MA 02638.
